Water Cure Establishment.

Water Cure Establishment.

The above institution is now open for the reception of patients. It is located about five miles from the city, on the Carthage pike, and but a few rods from the Hamilton, Cincinnati and bayton Ratiroad, in the tear and at the same distance from the Miami Canal, in the front, rendering it easy of access to those desirous of chioying the benefits of the Institution.

To the lover of nature, few parts of the country can furnish a more pleasing variety of scenery than spreads itself before the traveller all the way from Cincinnati to the Cure. There nature and art combine, tendering the view beautiful beyond description.

The new, large, and beautiful Raifice displays the taste of the artist at a glance. The nextness and eigance of the interior, combined with the numerous attractions which present themselves to the invalid, cannot fail to render this Extablishment a desirable on. The Halls are extensive, the Rooms spacious and inviting, where the invalid can range at pleasure, free from a tamospheric influences, in inclement weather. The Bed Rooms are ample and commodious, being convenient for the application of water, in every form. In connection with the Institution there is a Gymmasium Hall, excenty-five teet long, where patients will have an opportunity of restoring their muscular strength by healthin exercise. The Springs which for his health water both cold and delicious. The country and neighborhood are tenarkable for healthfulness, purity of air, and variety of scenery. All things combined, we cannot think of a more desirable place, for those seeking health, than this Institution.

Dr. Prass, having had much experience in the treatment of diseases peculiar to hot sec. Mrs. Prass, which has prostrating the energies, and destroying the usefulness of a large portion of the fair sex, will be created for so important a station, will take special of pessaries or supporters of any kind. POETRY. Napoleon in Egypt.

Beneath him stretched the sands of Egypt's burning lands, desert panied to the swelling ray, The camel's plashing feet, with slow, uneasy beat, wu p the sorching dust like arrow apray, And fierce the sunlight glowed, As young Napoleon rode, and the Gallic camp, companionless that day

High thoughts were in his mind,
Unapolem to his kind;
Calm was his face—his eyes were blank and chill;
His thin lips were compress'd;
The secrets of his breast
These portals never pass'd for good or ill;
And dreaded—yet adored—
His hand upon his aword,
He mused on Destiny to shape it to his will.

"Ye haughty Pyramide!
Thou Sphynx! whose eyeless lids
On my presumptious youth seem bent in scorn,
What though thou at stood
Coevel with the flood—
Of all earth's monuments the earliest born!
And I so mean and small,
With armies at my call,
Am recent in thy sight as grass of yestermorn!

"Yet in this soul of mine.

Te strength as great as thine, "Yet of the order of the O, melancholyatone,
With forty centuries furrow'd on thy brow;

From wandering age to age,
New light and reverence o'er that name shall gle
My deeds already done,
Are histories begun,
Whose great conclusion centuries shall not know
O, melaucholy Sphynx!
Present with future links,
And both shall yet be mine. I feel it as I go!"

Over the mighty chief,
There came a shadow of grief,
The lips gigantic seemed to move and say,
"Know'st thou his name that bid

Know'st thou who placed me where 1 stand to-day?
Thy deeds are but as sand,
Strewn on the heddless land,
Think, little mortal, think! and pass upon thy way,?

THE LOVE LETTER. A SKETCH FOR GENTLEMEN FLIRTS.

"My DEAR SIR:-Your letter, containing a most flattering avowal of regard for one who is compar-atively a stranger, has been received. Its effect I will not attempt to describe; nor will I, at this time, venture to put in written language what I feel. To-morrow evening I will spend at Mrs.

T—'s. May I hope to see you there?

Yours, &c.,

Andy was in ecstacies at this answer to this epis-

Andy was in ecstacies at this answer to this epistle. Its meaning to him was as plain as if Kate had said, "Dear Andrew, my heart is yours"

On the next evening, he repaired to Mrs. T—'s trembling with fond anticipation. On entering the parlor, he found but a single person therein, and that a young lady named Herbet, to whom he had formerly paid very marked attentions. Aware that she had been made unhappy by his fickleness, not call it by a harsher name, the meeting rather threw a damper on his feelings. But Andy had his share of coolness and self-possession, and although it cost him a considerable effort, he manhis share of coolness and self-possession, and although it cost him a considerable effort, he managed to introduce topics of conversation and to talk pretty freely, although the talking was nearly all on his own side, Miss Herbet maintaining a cold reserve, and answering entirely in monosyllables. For about a quarter of an hour, Andy endured the ordeal, wondering why this particular young lady should happen to be alone in the parlor of Mrs.

———, and wondering still more why Miss Archer lady should happen to be alone in the parlor of Mrs. T—, and wondering still more why Miss Archer did not make her appearance. Just as he began to feel a little excited and uneasy, the door opened and in walked another young maiden whom he had reason to remember—a Miss Mary Harper. She was also one of his old flames. She appeared surprised at seeing him, and greeted him with coldness. Andy tried to say some sprightly things to Miss Harper, but he was far from being in as good condition as at first. The effort to entertain Miss Herbert had somewhat exhausted his reservoir of spirits, and his attempts to draw farther thereon were not very successful. The two young ladies drew together on the sofa, and maintained a mutual reserve towards Andy that soon began to be al reserve towards Andy that soon began to be painfully embarrassing:

"What does all this mean?" Andy had just asked himself, for he was beginning to feel puzzled when the sound of light feet along the passage was again heard, and, the door opening, his eyes rested upon the form of Caroline Grey, to whom he had once paid his addresses. Very particular reasons had Andy Cavender for not wishing to meet Caroline on that particular occasion; for he had committed himself to her more directly than any other young lady in Woodland, having on one occasion actually written and sent to her a love-letter. The precise contents of that epistle he did not remember; but often, when he thought of it, he had doubts as to the extent to which he al reserve towards Andy that soon began to be of it, he had doubts as to the extent to which he had committed himself therein, that were not very comfortable.

Soon another and another entered, and, strange soon another and another enterty and, stange to say, each was an old flame, until there was no less than six fair, rebuking spirits. Silent Andy sat in the midst of these—silent, because the pressure of his feelings had become insufferably great—for nearly a quarter of an hour. It was a social party of the most novel character and one that he has never forgotten.

About the time that Andy's feelings were in as uncomfortable state as could well be imagined, and he was beginning to wish himself at the north pole, Kate Archer and her friend Jenny entered the room slowly, the former with an open letter in her hand, upon which the eyes of both were rectified.

In an instant, it flashed upon Andy Cavender that he was to be victimized by the city belle. No sooner had this thought crossed his mind than, rising abruptly, he bowed to his fair tormentors, "Excuse me, ladies." And beat a hasty retreat.

But, ere he had passed beyond the street door, here reached him a gush of merry laugher from he musical throat of Kate, in which other voices On the next day, he received a letter directed in a delicate hand. It enclosed the one he had written to Kate, and accompanying it was a note a deficate hald. The shifts of the written to Kate, and accompanying it was a note in these words:

"There is, it is presumed, a mistake in the direction of this. It was probably meant for Caroline Grey, Mary Harper, Nancy Herbert or Jenny Green. In order that it may receive its proper destination, it is returned to the writer."

The village flirt was a changed man after that, He had played with edge tools until he cut himself, and the wounds, in healing, left an ugly scar. Poor Andy, Cavender! All this happened years ago, and he is a bachelor still, notwithstanding several subsequent attempts to make a favorable impression on the hearts of certain pretty maidens. The story of his punishment at Mrs. T—'a flew over the village in a few hours, and after that, no fair denizen of Woodland for a moment thought of regarding any attention from Andy Cavender as more than a piece of idle pastime; and on the few occasions that he ventured to talk of love, the merry witches laughed him in the face, of love, the merry witches laughed him in the face, THE WAY TO LEARN, -Mr. Locke was asked how he had contrived to accumulate a mine of knowledge so rich, yet so extensive and deep. He replied, that he attributed what little he knew to the not having been ashamed to ask for information and to the rule he had laid down, of conversing with all descriptions of men, on those topics chiefly their own peculiar professions or pursuits.
